Popular platform for knowledge transfer and networking is set to continue this year

Henkel Sustainability Days will enter second round in November

Düsseldorf – After the successful debut of the Sustainability Forum in 2020, Henkel Packaging and Consumer Goods Adhesives will continue and enlarge the event under the new name of Sustainability Days in 2021. Bringing together the entire value chain in the field of packaging and consumer goods, Henkel has established a strong platform for knowledge transfer and networking within the industry with last year's event. As new developments and challenges affect the industry, Henkel and its partners will once again provide a platform for discussions and solutions for current and upcoming topics – from circular economy and energy saving to health and safety and many more. The business fields this year will include packaging end of line / labeling, flexible packaging, paper solutions, tapes and labels – and for the first time – personal hygiene.

Henkel cordially invites all stakeholders of the packaging and consumer goods industry to the Sustainability Days 2021 from November 16th to 18th. Besides the presentations and live Q&A sessions with dedicated experts at the auditorium, the platform features a virtual showroom exhibition with dedicated booths as well as a meeting point for networking or individual discussions, and a media library with webinar recordings.

Like last year, the participation is free of charge. Find more information here.

Henkel and its industry experts are excited for a broad participation and lively discussions with players across the value chain.

More information on the event and the sign-up process will be shared in the next months.
